ECB preview: No cut – Santa Owl expected to arrive empty-handed

Authors: Dr Norman Rudschuck, CIIA // Lukas Kühne // Tobias Cordes, CIIA

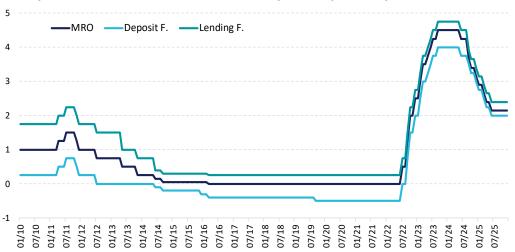

Interest rate decision on 18 Dec.: Winter is coming, main interest rates in the frozen zone Of course, we are also looking ahead in the year-end rush, and we know we still have a whole week to wait. Nevertheless, we wanted to keep our ECB preview free from the sting of Wham! and other nasty earworms currently blaring from the radio or Christmas markets respectively. Therefore, we opted for a modified children's version that is been stuck in our heads lately: Freely adapted from the Christmas carol "Tomorrow, children, there will be something", the authors of this text are currently humming, with reference to the ECB: "Tomorrow, traders, there will be nothing" – and not in 2026 either, should our prediction come true that next year will most likely see neither a key interest rate cut nor a hike. Besides the slim prospects for interest rate changes, we have also compiled all the dates for you until the end of 2026, including when the ECB press conferences will take place and on what date new staff projections can be expected quarterly: "What jubilation, what life / Will be in our house!", which brings us smoothly and cheerfully to today's main topic – the assessment of the monetary policy situation and a longer-than-expected interest rate pause, if one can still speak of such a thing.

The roadmap for 2025/26

The ECB is expected to meet on the following dates:

- 18 December incl. new staff projections, then for the first time for 2028
- 05 February 2026
- 19 March incl. new staff projections
- 30 April
- 11 June incl. new staff projections
- 23 July
- 10 September incl. new staff projections (host: Bundesbank)
- 29 October
- 17 December incl. new staff projections, then for the first time for 2029

ECB key interest rates (in %; incl. interest rate pause expected by us)

Minutes of the October meeting

On 27 November, the ECB published the minutes of its monetary policy meeting held in Florence on 29–30 October. As part of those, it becomes clear that the European monetary authorities (still) continued to view themselves as well positioned overall and therefore saw no need to adjust their monetary policy stance: the macroeconomic situation appeared more resilient than expected in light of ongoing trade conflicts and geopolitical uncertainties and the outlook for inflation in the Eurozone also remained largely unchanged. Even though there was consensus regarding the interest rate decision and the assessment of future inflation developments as well as no significant changes regarding the associated risks compared with the previous meeting, the minutes once again show that there were divergent views on future price developments in the common currency area. While some members "viewed inflation risks as tilted to the downside", only a few members "viewed inflation risks as tilted to the upside". However, most members considered the inflation outlook "to be more uncertain than usual" due to the still volatile global trade policy environment, which supports their wait-and-see approach. This makes the staff projections scheduled for the December meeting all the more important, as they will for the first time – offer an outlook for the inflation rate and expected economic growth in 2028 and, in the words of ECB Chief Economist Philip R. Lane, enable a "richer analysis of the appropriate monetary policy stance". In our view, the upside and downside risks are now largely balanced, and we maintain our assessment that the interest rate pause will be extended once again. The (supposed) postponement of the second phase of the Emissions Trading System (ETS2) is unlikely to change this.

Opinions from within the inner ECB circle

Since the last ECB meeting at the end of October, the mood we have perceived from the ECB's inner circle has changed noticeably. While some members at the last key interest rate meeting still emphasized downward risks in inflation development, so that a further downward interest rate move did not seem to be ruled out in the foreseeable future, Isabel Schnabel spoke in a highly publicized interview with Bloomberg at the beginning of December of a key interest rate hike as the ECB's next monetary policy step. Schnabel continues to identify some challenges, particularly with regard to the core inflation rate, which she sees as the best indicator of future price pressure in the Eurozone. Services inflation driven by stronger wage growth - has proven to be more stubborn than expected. Accordingly, she sees upward risks in inflation as dominant and deduces from this that the monetary authorities' next interest rate move should potentially be upwards. When asked about a possible interest rate hike in 2026, Schnabel was indifferent and pointed out that they would deal with it in due course. In the days that followed, François Villeroy de Galhau, who belongs more to the dovish camp in the ECB Council, offered a counterpoint to Schnabel's hawkish statements. He emphasized that he cannot currently identify any reason that would make it necessary to raise key interest rates in the near future. At the same time, he highlighted the need to continue to "remain flexible and open to decisions at future meetings". The Lithuanian council member Gediminas Šimkus formulated a change in his inflation expectations. In October, Simkus said that there was a higher chance that inflation in the Eurozone could fall below the target, but he now sees inflation close to the ECB's 2% goal in the medium to long term. He does not derive any need for further interest rate steps and refers not only to the December meeting, but also the subsequent ones. These opinions from the ECB's inner circle indicate what we consider to be a significant change in mood within the ECB Governing Council. The hawks seem to be slowly taking over the helm among the monetary authorities again.

ECB interest rate decision: Our forecast for 18 December

We assume that the Governing Council will again not make any adjustments to the three key interest rates at its upcoming meeting. Thus, the deposit facility rate is likely to remain at a level of 2.0%. The main refinancing operations rate would still stand at 2.15%, while the rate of the marginal lending facility would still be 2.4%. The European policy makers still see their current position confirmed. This is likely to mean "straight" for a long time – most likely throughout 2026.

Please, dear ECB, leave the TPI in the drawer in 2026 too

To put it straight forward: We have nothing against the TPI per se. However, it has softer conditions than the OMT. And that one is still in the drawer too – It would be good if both stayed there troughout 2026. The TPI complements the Eurosystem's tool box and can be activated to counteract unjustified, disorderly market developments if they pose a serious threat to the consistent transmission of monetary policy in the euro area. First let us mention the facts of the program design again:

- The focus of purchases under the TPI would be on public sector securities.
- These would be marketable bonds issued by central and regional governments as well as recognized institutions with a public funding mandate.
- Remaining term: over one year to a maximum of ten years
- If appropriate, the acquisition of private sector securities could also be considered.

All of this can only start if the following criteria are met:

- Compliance with the EU"s financial policy regulations: The sovereign is not in an Excessive Deficit Procedure (EDP) or has not been found to have breached the effective corrective measures recommended by the EU Council.
- The absence of serious macroeconomic imbalances: The sovereign is not in an Excessive Imbalance Procedure (EIP) or has not been found to have breached the corrective measures recommended by the EU Council.
- Sustainability of public finances: The Governing Council will take into account the debt sustainability analysis carried out by the European Commission, the ESM, the IMF or any other institutions, as well as the ECB's internal analysis.
- A solid and sustainable economic policy: The sovereign complies with the commitments for the Recovery and Resilience Facility contained in the recovery and resilience plans and meets the country-specific recommendations of the European Commission in the area of financial policy.

Conclusion and outlook

Against the backdrop of the latest news, comments and market developments, there are many indications that the ECB will continue its interest rate pause in the coming week. Monetary policy in the Eurozone thus remains on hold again – or have we already been at the final stage for a long time and have not finally realized it yet? The expected interest rate cut at the end of the year has been priced out gradually. Initial market opinions are even suggesting that the next interest rate step could only take place in 2027 – and then be upwards already.
